Sunday morning at 7am we are called to help with a search in Josuha Tree National Park. A British National was last seen at 6pm the day before and did not have much water. It had been over 100 degrees the day before and was going to be that hot again today. The Park Service wanted as many searchers as possible to try and find him before it got too hot. As we were driving out to the Park we got a call that a helicopter had found him alive. So we turned around and went home.
